Balanced representation on local councils?

Percentage of women elected to local councils

Observatori IQ

Women's representation was a key issue on the political agenda in the most recent local elections. As a result of the elections, women now head the governments of some of Catalonia's biggest cities, including Barcelona. The number of women councillors has also increased everywhere. Despite this positive trend towards pluralism in the exercise of key public roles, the situation is still far from ideal: in 393 municipalities, i.e., four in ten, men account for more than 60% of town councillors, going against the spirit of the current law.
